Ten ideas from other carers

Many other families have cared for someone who was very sick and who did not get better. Below are their ideas on what can help make the journey a little easier.

1. Look after yourself, your health is important – Try to eat well, exercise, sleep and keep going to your own medical appointments and taking any prescribed medicine.
2. Stay connected with work, family and friends if you can.
3. Look at what financial supports are available to you and sign up for them as early as you can.
4. Think about what might be needed to ensure all business is handed over. This might include changing names on bank accounts, knowing where important documents are kept (including an advanced care plan or Last Will and Testament), and talking about practical things the family and friends will need to know in the future (including a funeral and burial place). The person you are caring for may prefer to be buried in their home country so checking with the relevant embassy or health authority of their home country in advance may make the process easier later on.
5. Register for My Aged Care if appropriate. My Aged Care is a government funded program which offers home support to people who need help to stay at home.
6. Ask for help if you need it from your doctor or health worker. Many family and friends try to manage themselves and do not realise that they are allowed to ask for help. There are a lot of services set up to help those who are caring for someone who is very sick.

7. Write down any questions you may have and ask at your next appointment.
8. Don't be afraid to call a helpline – have the number close by.
9. If there is something you don't understand, don't be afraid to ask the doctor or health worker to explain it again.
10. Speak up. Let the doctor and health worker know what is important to you and the person you are caring for. Your values and beliefs are important.
